

For the Eagle.

MIDNIGHT.

When the slow rain drips, And the finger tips Of some ghost seem to touch each door, When a death watch ticks, And the night winds tricks Are as stealthy steps on the floor—

When the leaden weight, Seems to suffocate,
Of the night with its dripping rain,
Full of weird sound.
Like some creature bound,

That is crying aloud with pain. Then my beart beats low, As the rain drips slow, For the velvet dark is a thrill,

Eyric voices call, Softly over all, Spirit tones from the years long still. Back the veil is thrown From the great unknown; In the soul's wonderland I see; 'Tis too wide for hate,

Love kneels near the gate, And the sunlight falls eternally. And from out of space, Grows your wistful face,
With the marvelous eyes so rare;
And my heart knows thine,
By a law divine,

For a master hand has placed it there. With a shock I seem Hark! I hear a haby's low cry;

* * * 1 stumble back,

Through the night so black,

To the graves where the night winds sigh. Still the monotone Of the mist rain blown

On the window pane by the wind;
A presence unseen
By my side has been, Though my mortal eyes were blind

MATRIMONY THE BASIS OF SOCIETY. To the Editor of the Eagle.

This domestic constitution is a distinmishing characteristic of Christianity and sessential to the elevation and happiness of our race. Every young person should if possible contemplate being married. It is a duty as well as a privilege to have a companion to share in the responsibilities, interests and enjoyments of life. If a man terests and enjoyments of life. It a man is in circumstances to be married he is usually less useful to society and usually less happy for remaining in a single state. That his happiness may be perfect and entire be must have a wife, or vice versa. This we can testify to by experience, When a man lives single beyond the proper time surely some are rendy to say there is sensething wrong and expirition. something wrong and suspicion is preva-lent among the other sex. This may be a little severe in some cases, for there are some bachelors whose characters are beyoud a question. The time for marriage varies somewhat by circumstances, but early marriages are desirable. Do not wait until your intended goes to the Pacific coast to become a mon-of-wealth and power, but if best for him to do this be with him the privations of early life, all its hardships, sorrows and cares, then when prosperity comes. when prosperity comes you have shared with him the life of anticipation for a time, now comes the reality of home, joy, comfort, happiness, more by far than it otherwise would have been. If your means are limited limit your expenses accordingly the latter is always the best. It is the happiest and most virtuous state of so-city in which the husband and wife set out early together, make their property together, and with perfect sympathy of soul graduate all their expenses, plans, calculations and desires with reference to their present means and to their future more than to enter a neat little cottage of the young couple who within two or three last years have joined hearts and hands to share together the duties, trials and pleasures of life. The loving wife is cheerfully empkoying her own hands in the donestic duties, putting her house in order, or meeding her husband's clothes, or preparing the dinner, while the little one, the darling of the home, sits prattling upon the floor, or sweetly sleeping in the cib beside the wall. Everything seems prepared to welcome the happiest of has

AMUSEMENTS.

CHAWFORD GRAND. Prof. Gentry's troupe of dogs and ponies was the attraction at the Crawford Grand yesterday. Both matinee and evening performance were well attended and the wonderfully intelligent animals made friends with everybody. At the close the audience was invited behind the scenes and allowed to handle and inspect the pets, who eemed to enjoy the attention paid them. They do everything except talk and plainly show that they appreciate everything that is said to them. The performance of Roneo was simply astonishing, while Dalmeta's leap is almost incredible. The

M. de Cassagnac is formidable because of the skill with which be wields the three terrible weapons-tongue, pen and sword. He is a man of powerful stature, dark skinned, dark eyed, and wearing his mass of jet black hair brushed straight back from his forebead. He speaks with a lisping cadence poculiar to southern France.

Sir Edwin Arnold says of Walt Whitman "I think he is the handsomest old man I ever saw, with the head of Jupiter and strength in every feature; I had a pleasant interview sitting for a long time face to face, with his hand on my knee and my hand on his; I am more than ever convinced that he is one of the greatest of American writers, for his poetry is wonderful!"

Marion Crawford is pictured as follows: "He is over six feet in height, with broad shoulders, small feet and a large head, the latter being well covered with a profusion of brown bair; a beard of the same conceals the lower part of his face; a fine but rather large mouth is partially hidden by a mustache of the same hue as his beard; his teeth are hand-

HINTS TO TEACHERS. Discipline with the eye as far as possible. Elevate the tone of mental work a trifle each day, Elevate the moral tone of the class in every Leave as little room to luck in class work

Effective expression is not receiving the attention it demands.

The individuality of the pupil should be generally preserved. The best educational principles apply to the teaching of any subject.

Attempt nothing in which the chances are against its accomplishment. School work should beighten appreciation of the beautiful as well as of the trus. So focus your teaching that the children shall see the reason for a thing about as soon as they know the fact.

To discipline is to disciple. This is a highly suggestive thought, and ought both to soften discipline and make it more effective. In teaching principles and processes, deal with facts and figures so simple and well known that nothing shall distract the pupils' minds from the principle or process.-Jour
